THIS work was originally framed by the author, with a view of acquiring as extensive a knowledge as possible of the Regulations himself, and without the most distant idea of making it public. He has, however, freely allowed every public officer of his acquaintance to take a copy; and all who have consulted it having assured him that they derived great assistance from it, he has been induced to consent to its publication, in the hope that it will prove useful to his fellow servants—and as (having this object solely in view) he declines receiving any pecuniary consideration whatever for the work, he trusts, that the Service will make due allowance for any imperfections it may be found to contain.

The plan of the work is extremely simple; and, by containing a sufficient number of blank columns, it may be carried on to any number of years, as new regulations are enacted. It is also so far complete, that it not only refers the inquirer to any single regulation he may wish to consult on a particular subject, but it exhibits to him at one glance all the regulations enacted on that subject; so that, by referring to them in succession, he not only finds the particular provision which he is in search of, but he is enabled to trace the law as it stood at the commencement of the code, through all the various amendments, modifications, or rescissions which after-experience has proved necessary.

In order to render it still more useful, it is preceded by a Chronological Table of the Regulations, from 1793 to 1828, specifying of each regulation, under what department, division, and head it is inserted. A List of Regulations entirely rescinded or superseded, is also annexed, as a useful table for immediate reference.
